

The water wheel was a source of power.

This early American coloring page shows what an early water powered grist mill might have looked like. Mills like this sprang up along most rivers to help the people grind their corn and grain into flour for baking.